About the author:

Spanish architect and tutor in the Master of Architecture + Urbanism at the Manchester School of Architecture. He is graduated from the European University of Madrid and Master in Urbanism from the University of Malaga. Although he started working as a freelance architect, shortly after an Asset Management company in Marbella hired him, where he is working in design, construction, refurbishment and urbanism. His interest in ruralism and history has led him to start a thesis on garden cities in British territory, which he combines there working as a tutor and remotely for the Spanish company. Currently, he is actively involved with his students in a project on revitalising an abandoned village in the north of Spain, as well as taking part as an Expert Jury in an international competition on rural development. In his spare time, Antonio enjoys making sketches of streets, reading books on history, as well as attending the wide musical panorama offered in Manchester.
