Since the 1980s, garden cities have been the subject of symposia, conferences and publications that have made it possible to better understand this heritage and its concept in its entirety and in their individual stories. This history has been written at the local, national, European and global levels.

Faced today, for many of them, with land pressure and urban renewal, the garden cities remain an important marker of the history of popular housing at the beginning of the 20th and inter-war period.

In a few words...

This symposium aims to put into perspective different dimensions of a common heritage resulting from a concept of garden city developed by Ebenezer Howard in 1898. An inventory, a comparative approach and the enunciation of possible futures are expected.

During 4 half-days thematic will be addressed the issues of valorization, preservation, living and living in the garden cities and how this concept can serve as a model today.

Researchers, residents, communities and architects will exchange on these themes through conferences and round tables. The themes will address transversally the dimension of buildings and outdoor spaces, at different scales that embrace collective spaces of sociability, the materiality of places, representations and practices...
